

Local bans that stand: New York towns win legal challenges to fracking ban ordinances

Everyone fighting to protect our lives, the environment, our states, and our planet from the suicidal, poisonous invasion of fracking is celebrating the two wins in New York state last week declaring the Dryden and Middlefield fracking ban local ordinances legal. In two separate court opinions, judges found that the people in local communities have the power to stand up to multinational gas corporations.

Maura Stephens, of the Park Center for Independent Media at Ithaca College and a co-founder of Coalition to Protect New York, writes in Yes! Magazine about the grassroots groups in Dryden and Middlefield and how they organized to pass local ban ordinances:

Fracking Bans that Can Stand

In New York, judges are standing up for communities' rights to say no to corporate drilling.

by Maura Stephens

posted Feb 29, 2012

Photo by Not An Alternative.

In New York State, some 82 towns and counties have passed ordinances outlawing fracking, a natural gas drilling method known for causing severe water pollution. Another 35 have ordinances in the works. But until last week, no one knew quite what would happen when those ordinances were—invariably—challenged by drilling companies.

Now, in a resounding win for activists, two different state Supreme Court justices have upheld fracking bans in two different New York towns.

[\[Read the rest of the article\]](#)

[\[Read a longer version of the article here\]](#)

The Dryden decision can be found here.

The Middlefield decision can be found here: Middlefield-decision

More articles about the court decisions in New York:

- Court upholds Dryden's ban on fracking, The Ithaca Daily Sun, 2/22/2012
- Judge's ruling complicates hydrofracking issue in New York, New York Times, 2/22/2012
- Decision on Dryden's fracking ban could set a national precedent, Pro Publica, 2/23/2012
- Dryden gas ban holds up in court, The Cooperstown Crier, 2/23/2012
- Middlefield wins 'home rule' case in court: Victory comes on heels of similar ruling for Dryden, The Daily Star, 2/24/2012
- Another court upholds fracking ban, The Ithaca Daily Sun, 2/27/2012

In Michigan

No Michigan community has passed a local ban ordinance (local law). Detroit, Ferndale and Wayne County have passed resolutions declaring support for a statewide ban and a national ban on fracking, but did not actually ban the fracking industry within its borders.

Ban Michigan Fracking is working with communities on real fracking ban ordinances and is working on a statewide ban.

Contact us about working on a local ban in your community by writing us at info at banmichiganfracking dot org

See also:

Replace with your logo

Ban Michigan Fracking

A grassroots group dedicated to banning fracking
<http://banmichiganfracking.org>

Coalition to Protect New York

Community Environmental Legal Defense Fund

Dryden Resource Awareness Coalition

Andrew Meyer, “Get the frack out of town:” Preemption Challenges to Local Fracking Bans in New York, Columbia Journal of Environmental Law, Field Reports 2012.